

Octavo (180 by 120mm). Folding engraved map (620 by 500mm) with contemporary hand-colour in outline; original pink printed paper wrappers.

PHILIP'S NEW MAP OF THE GOLD FIELDS OF AUSTRALIA, FOR THE WELSH

Gwlad yr aur [Country of Gold (trans.)] neu, Gydymaith yr ymfudwr Cymreig i Australia [or, the Companion of the Welsh migrant to Australia (trans.)] : yn cynwys, hanes y cyfandir australaidd, y trefedigaethau prydeinig ynddo, ac ardaloedd yr aur, eu tir, hinsawdd, masnach, cyflogau, deddfau, &c., &c.; yn nghyda llawys o ffeithiau o ddyddordeb a phwys arbenig i'r ymfudwr gan D. Ap G., Ap Huw... ; Hefyd, Can yr ymfudwr, gan Eben Fardd.

Author

AP HUW, D. ap G.; Eben FARDD; and George PHILIP

Publication date

1852

Publisher

Argraffwyd, cyhoeddwyd, ac ar werth gan H. Humphreys,

Publication place

Caernarfon Gwynedd,

Physical description

Octavo (180 by 120mm). Folding engraved map (620 by 500mm) with contemporary hand-colour in outline; original pink printed paper wrappers.

Dimensions

Notes

With George Philip's important early map of the Gold Fields of southeastern Australia: 'Philip's new map of the gold fields of Australia comprising all the recent discoveries of Mr. Hargraves, Mr. Hunter, Revd. W. Clark & others in the auriferous districts 1852' (Liverpool, George Philip & Son, 1852).

The first Australian Gold Rush began in May of 1851 when seasoned prospector, in both Australia and California, Edward Hammond Hargraves (1816-1891) found substantial deposits in Bathurst in New South Wales, and claimed a reward from both the Colonies of New South Wales and Victoria. He then ignored pleas for secrecy, and announced his discovery in the 'Sydney Morning Herald', named the area as Ophir, and whipped up enthusiasm in the Bathurst district. "By 15 May over 300 diggers were at Ophir and the first Australian gold rush had begun. It would continue on and off for the rest of the nineteenth century, and have a great effect on the population, which increased from 430,000 in 1851 to 1.7 million in 1871.

The southeastern portion of Australia had been named New South Wales by Captain James Cook, after its resemblance to South Wales, and Welsh people were numbered amongst the first settlers there. Wales has a long history of gold panning and mining, stretching back to ancient times.

Bibliography

Ferguson 10630; NLA Bib ID: 1038594

Provenance

Price: £1000

Inventory reference: 12995